"The Root of the Matter"

Job 19:28

Men, as sinful in and through Adam, are in an estate of misery. This miserable condition is the inevitable result of the sin of Adam, and part of the imputed penalty of that sin, which exposes sinful man to the displeasure, or wrath and curse of God. This evil comes in connection with the loss of communion with God. Thus to be without God is to be without hope in this world. Man also became liable to all miseries in this life, such as pain, sickness, disappointment, misfortune, grief and sorrow. The curse which was passed upon the ground for man's sake comes in to make his lot all the more miserable as he toils for his bread by the sweat of his face. But there is more: the Scriptures often teach that men by reason of the fall have lost their true liberty and become the bondslaves of Satan, and are "children of darkness" and "led captive by Satan at his will." Thus this bondage leads to the ultimate misery that is to befall the sons of Adam, namely death and hell. Death is that which ushers man into his eternal state, and hell is the just punishment of wicked sinners who have rebelled against God's holy law and glorious being. Now dear reader, unless you are left to believe there is no hope, let me point you to one who by his death removed the guilt and penalty for sin and by faith looking to Jesus Christ, the chiefest of sinners may have salvation, and deliverance from sin's miseries.
